EDUCATION

J.D. Georgetown University Law Center, 1999
B.A. Yale University, 1996, With Distinction in Major

PRESENT EMPLOYMENT

Director, Berkeley Research Group (BRG), 2018—present
Adjunct Professor, St. John's University Law School, 2013—present

Ignatius Grande has been advising clients on issues relating to electronic discovery, information management, and data privacy for more than 15 years. With his legal and technical expertise, Ignatius is able to bridge the gap that can exist between IT and legal/compliance personnel. Ignatius has worked with both law firms and companies to guide them through the eDiscovery and the forensic investigation process and has overseen the collection and production of data for several HSR Second Requests. Ignatius has served as formal eDiscovery liaison for clients and has represented parties in eDiscovery disputes before a variety of regulators. He often works with companies to address complex information management issues, including the onboarding of new software and technologies and the privacy and security implications of Internet of Things devices and sensors. Ignatius has performed compliance risk assessments for corporations that addressed records retention and data remediation compliance issues. Ignatius works with companies to effectively implement information management practices and can assist in implementing or revising a variety of policies relating to information security, data privacy, records retention, vital records, social media, BYOD, legal holds, and mobile device governance.

Ignatius serves as co-chair of the Social Media & New Communications Technologies Committee of the New York State Bar Association's Litigation Section and as the Vice President of the ACEDS New York Metro chapter. He has taught an eDiscovery course at St. John's University School of Law for the last six years. Ignatius has worked for two major law firms and also served as in-house counsel for a global commodities company.
